YESHIVA COLLEGE

BELIEF & RELIGIOUS COMMITMENT

Our primary concern in this course will be to examine certain issues and texts relating to the nature of belief, its place and significance in human thought in general, and with regard to religious commitment in particular. We shall read texts, and call upon methods of thought, belonging to the disciplines of Jewish thought, Western philosophy, theology and literature (possibly cognitive psychology as well). Though unable to undertake a study of all the pertinent facets of thought, or even to exhaust one specific discipline, we shall, I hope, hit several of the high points of the subject and, if successful, learn something about the manner in which one may integrate various disciplines.

Writing: There will be 3-5 assignments (about 10-15 pages in all). I must insist on promptness in handing them in.

Journal articles, almost all books before 1900 available online or via our online holdings. Other texts are on reserve on 2nd Floor of library.

TENTATIVE OUTLINE: (Additional texts and references will come.)

1. Gettier, Is Justified True Belief Knowledge?; Richard Foley, When is True Belief Knowledge? (e-book available through Pollack Library)

Feel free to reach me by phone 1-718-252-0496 (best time-- 10-12 P.M.) to discuss course material or any other constructive matters. As usual, let me express the shopworn yet phoenix-like belief that we can contribute to one another's growth as thinking religious individuals and perhaps to the future flourishing of a Torah veHokhma community. e-mail: carmy@yu.edu.
